Your clients have become accustomed to streamlined and convenient customer experiences — paying bills is no exception. Unlike the majority of modern businesses, most lawyers still mail invoices, don't accept credit cards, and wait up to 90 days for return of payment. This prolongs your client's lifecycle, your firm's cash flow, and hinders the closing of a case.

Inefficient business models are currently the norm for most law firms — get ahead of your competition with Clio Payments.

The Problem

 83 days

Lawyers wait an average of 83 days between issuing an invoice, and receiving payment from a client.

That's almost three months and is far longer than any all other industry norms.

84% of solo and small law firm don't accept online payments from clients.

Businesses that accept credit card payments eliminate payment obstacles for clients, bad debt and create a far more streamlined experience.

An inefficient billing system uses up administrative resources and takes away from time spent on legal strategy costing you billable hours.

This has a knock-on effect on case processing time, cash flow, and client intake — affecting your business as a whole.
